1.1 Creative Inquiry Second Edition – What's new?

Creative Inquiry Second Edition remains a valuable guide to assist students to navigate senior Visual Art. This edition remains aligned to the course structure and terminology of the Queensland Visual Art General senior syllabus and retains the valuable features of the first edition.

New case studies

This edition includes entirely new case studies in each of the four units, which will introduce your students to new artists and their works. Some of these are only available in the interactive textbook because the artists' practices are digital, thereby allowing students to access the actual digital works. Each case study includes a new graphic organiser to assist students in quickly making links between their own artwork and the artists' practices.

CONTEXTS

- Personal Contemporary
- A collaborative project in response to Covid lockdown, where the two met via online posts and formed a personal connection as creatives
- Explores the character of the sitter who has her own fascination with objects that are recycled, whimsical and fun
- The vibrant colour reinforces a personal connection to costumes and the entertainment industry
- Replicating the contemporary Instagram moment.

MEANING

Visual language

Formal pose with traditional curtain. The colour purple has a history of status and emphasises the synthetic found objects that glitter with intrigue. The brushstrokes and composition evoke a sense of intimacy and a character who, as a comedian, is full of life and energy.

Symbols

Toys are assembled into a decorative headdress reminiscent of royalty. There is a hint of the Thai chada and mongkut, a pointed cloth headdress of Persian origin during the Ayutthaya period, that features a distinctive tall, pointed shape. The textures and saturated colour of the fabric and armchair are luscious. Together they establish an enticing focus on the sitter.

Materials/media/processes

Scale, proportion and lighting combine to make a personal portrait using some traditional methods of representation.

Display

Formally framed with reference to the painters of the European Old Masters, the scale of 120x120cm is immersive.

COLLABORATION

Andrea Huelin – artist, reacted to the humour and responded by inviting her to sit for the portrait painting.

Cal Wilson – comedian, assembled the objects using plastics and her hot glue gun, posing on a home-made stage, with a haughty expression.

INQUIRY QUESTIONS

- How do artists communicate character through the portrait genre?
- How does culture and history influence imagery that explores celebrity?
- How do materials and construction result in creative imagery?

Every case study in Creative Inquiry Second Edition features a helpful graphic organiser like this one about Andrea Huelin's Clown Jewels.

They provide a visual summary of key points about the artist's practice and make connections between the many facets of analysing, interpreting and evaluating.

© Cambridge University Press and Assessment 2025

Assessment examples

Each of the summative assessment instruments is addressed within one section to facilitate easy access for your students. There are new examples of students' bodies of work to illustrate IA1, IA2 and IA3. These are more extensive than in the first edition and they provide tips about how to understand and address performance-level descriptor terminology such as strengths, implications and limitations.

There is also a new section exploring annotated images. This has been designed to support students in their IA2 and IA3 assessments. Throughout this edition annotated images and artist's statements are modelled extensively.

Learnings from the early years of this syllabus implementation have inspired the authors to create a much larger section on preparing for external exams filled with information, examples and activities.

Visual language

There is an all-new section about visual language, expression and meaning with an emphasis on ways to interpret and analyse visual language. This supports students to understand and manipulate visual language in both making and responding aspects of the assessment instruments.

This installation by Nike Savvas, Atomic: full of love, full of wonder, 2005, at Art Gallery of NSW contained over 50 000 suspended polystyrene balls oscillated with wind from electric fans. The work capitalises on warm colours to suggest a hot Australian landscape.

© Cambridge University Press and Assessment 2025

First Nations content

Creative Inquiry Second Edition foregrounds local First Nations perspectives and has been reviewed for cultural sensitivity by a First Nations consultant.

Chapter 1 contains a table showing how to analyse and interpret Daniel Boyd's work, Untitled (HNDFWMIAFN) 2017, through each of the four contexts. This example demonstrates how the context guiding questions can be used to make sense of an artwork.

Furthermore, Chapter 4 provides suggestions about how to be culturally responsive and where to find out more about correct protocols, when writing about First Nations artists.

Daniel Boyd, Untitled (HNDFWMIAFN) 2017, oil, charcoal and archival glue on polyester, 210 x 360cm.

© Cambridge University Press and Assessment 2025